Roberts next college president

Seven years as college leader in Salem, Ore.

Cheryl Roberts will be the next president of Shoreline Community College.

“I’m thrilled to be joining a premier college that is focused on students and student achievement,” Roberts said. “There’s an indomitable spirit at Shoreline.”

On a motion by Trustee Tayloe Washburn, the Board on Monday, April 21, voted unanimously to offer the position to Roberts. Under the recently finalized three-year contract, Roberts will be paid $200,000 a year. Roberts will receive a set amount to help defray expenses related to moving from the Salem, Ore., area where she is now President at Chemeketa Community College.

Roberts has signed the board-negotiated and approved contract offer that will now go to the trustees for the formality of board signatures at the regular June meeting.

Roberts’ start date will be Aug. 18. Interim President Daryl Campbell has committed to stay beyond his current contract, which runs through June 30, to help make the transition as seamless as possible.

“I think we are getting one of the great ones,” Trustee Phil Barrett said following the April 21 vote.

Roberts is currently president at Chemeketa Community College in Salem, Ore.
Sen. Maria Cantwell will be speaker at graduation

Shoreline Community College

U.S. Sen. Maria Cantwell will be the keynote speaker at the 50th Anniversary Commencement for Shoreline Community College. The graduation ceremonies are scheduled for 2 p.m., Sunday, June 8, in the college gymnasium.

“We are honored to have Sen. Cantwell on our campus and speaking to our graduates,” Interim President Daryl Campbell said. “Sen. Cantwell’s record of service to our community, state and country is long and distinguished. Her words and wisdom will be of great benefit to our students.”

Sen. Cantwell was 28 when she began her political career while living in Mountlake Terrace and winning a seat in the Washington State House of Representatives in 1986. She served three terms in Olympia before making the leap to the U.S. House in 1992, becoming the first Democrat elected to the 1st Congressional District seat in 40 years.

Founded in 1964, Shoreline is marking 50 years of preparing students with the education and training they need for their next steps in life.

Shoreline Community College has signed a landmark agreement with BELTEI International University in Phnom Penh, Cambodia.

“We’re very excited to be BELTEI’s first American partner,” Shoreline’s Interim President Daryl Campbell said. “BELTEI’s focus on the needs of students, the community and business and industry matches that of Shoreline Community College.

“This agreement is another step forward in Shoreline’s internationalization initiative,” Campbell said. “One in three jobs in Washington is dependent on international trade. By addressing global competencies for our students, we better prepare them to find success in the global economy.”

BELTEI is a private university developed by BELTEI International Institute founded in 2002. President Ly Chheng is the founder and Director General of the BELTEI group and President of BELTEI International University. BELTEI International Institutes have opened 13 campuses across Phenom Penh, Cambodia’s capital.

The agreement was signed April 22, 2014 during a ceremony at the main Phnom Penh campus. “The event was phenomenal and drew significant attention from the media in Cambodia,” Campbell said.

At the signing, President Chheng said the memorandum of understanding will help students obtain the knowledge and skills needed to compete in national and international labor markets, become good leaders and understand more about cultures and civilizations of other countries.

The agreement calls for:

• Sharing best practices in teaching, learning to advance U.S.-Cambodia relations through higher education;
• Increasing exchange of education and initiatives;
• Increasing exchange of educational leaders and administrators to initiate global partnerships and identify resources to develop sustainable international programs;
• Exploring other areas of mutual interest and agreement between BELTEI University and Shoreline Community College.

As a result of the agreement, Shoreline Executive Director for International Education Diana Sampson said that Shoreline could see Cambodian students on campus as early as this fall.

Gov. Jay Inslee to sign climate order

Task force will take on carbon reduction

Gov. Jay Inslee came to Shoreline Community College to sign an executive order intended to reduce carbon pollution in Washington and push for clean energy technologies.

At an April 29, 2014 press conference in the Professional Automotive Training Center, Inslee signed an executive order to establish the Carbon Emissions Reduction Task Force composed of 21 leaders from business, labor, health and public interest organizations. The group will provide recommendations to the governor on design and implementation of a market-based carbon pollution program.

Inslee then kicked off the first meeting of the task force immediately following the press event. The Governor directed the task force to consider measures to offset costs to consumers and businesses and to design strategies to help energy-intensive industries transition from carbon-based energy sources.

Rod Brown of the Cascadia Law Group and Ada Healey of Vulcan will co-chair the task force. Final recommendations are due Nov. 21, 2014.

Shoreline Board of Trustees Chair Shoubee Liaw welcomed Inslee to campus, first at the Clean Energy Technology Center and again to introduce him at the press conference. Joining college officials at the clean-energy center were Shoreline Mayor Shari Winstead and City Manager Debbie Tarry.

Attendees at the press conference included a number of legislators, including Sen. Maralyn Chase and Rep. Ruth Kagi from the 32nd District. Also attending were Rep. Hans Dunshee, Chair of the House Capital Budget Committee; Rep. Joe Fitzgibbon, Chair of the Environment Committee; Sen. Kevin Ranker, ranking member on Ways & Means; Sen. David Frockt, a member of Ways & Means and Higher Education; Sen. Christine Rolfes, a member, Early Learning & K-12 and Education.

Industry representatives attending included Steve Klein, of Klein Honda and President of the Puget Sound Auto Dealers Association, Glenn Grossenbacher, of Snap-on Industrial, and Gary Shaver, CEO of Silicon Energy. Shaver’s Marysville-based company manufactured the solar panel that served as the desk on which Inslee signed the executive order establishing the task force.

In her comments before the press conference, Chair Liaw noted that automotive center was the perfect place for Inslee’s initiative to reduce carbon emissions.

“Transportation is responsible for the majority of fuel use in this country,” Liaw said. “In this facility, we train the best technicians in the world on the latest technologies in the world to reduce our fuel usage and move toward other, more sustainable energy sources.

“Sustainability is not just about generating clean energy, but also learning how to use less of traditional energy sources and that’s what this program and our many industry partners are committed to doing.”

DECA team competes in D.C.

Shoreline Community College

Following their success at the Pacific Northwest Career Development Conference in February, Shoreline Community College DECA went to Washington D.C. to test their knowledge and skills at the 2014 International Career Development Conference (ICDC) from April 23-26.

Collegiate DECA ICDC brings roughly 2,000 college students together from around the world to compete in business simulations. With almost every aspect of business represented in the form of a business simulation, case study or prepared presentation, students have the opportunity to test themselves against the best business students from other colleges and universities.

Shoreline DECA qualified 15 members for the international competition. Students presented to business professionals from the D.C. area, creating a link between their studies and real life business scenarios. This is the 48th consecutive year Shoreline DECA has competed at ICDC.

The following competitors placed in the top ten:

- Katie LeBrun, Business-to-Business Marketing
- Blake McBride, Business-to-Business Marketing
- Frenchie Loveheart, Entrepreneurship

The rest of the Shoreline DECA team included:

- Nissi Abundiz, Professional Sales
- Sarah Baker, Business Ethics
- Andrea Csutak, Business Ethics
- William Holmes, Hospitality Marketing
- Kay Sage, Human Resource Management
- Ashley Kelly, Business Ethics
- Zach Olson, Marketing Management
- Alex Purdy, Retail Management
- Silvia Rojas, Business Ethics
- Xanne Sarka, Hospitality Marketing

Shoreline DECA’s advisor Mona Starr received DECA’s 2014 Outstanding Service Award. The award is presented to professionals who have made distinguished contributions to further the mission of DECA at the international level for more than five years. The other Shoreline DECA advisors attending the conference were David Starr and Stephen McCloskey.

City Council tours campus facilities as part of strategic planning retreat

Members of the Shoreline City Council and city staff came to Shoreline Community College on Friday, April 11, 2014, as part of the council’s annual strategic planning meeting.

The contingent from the city toured the college theater, soon-to-open black-box production facility and got a look at the proposed location for on-campus student housing. Shoreline digital filmmaking and acting faculty member Tony Doupe led the city council and staff members on the tour.

The theater and black-box locations were of particular interest to council members because the city, college and college foundation are collaborating on the Shoreline Film Office. The joint effort is leveraging the college’s strong programs in digital film, acting, visual arts, music performance and music technology and the city’s efforts to be a sustainable focal point for film and digital arts industries.

Although less than a year old, the Shoreline Film Office has been successful in drawing a number of feature, corporate and commercial film projects to the college and city.

of success at Chemeketa combine to create exactly the right formula to propel Shoreline Community College forward. I will work closely with Dr. Roberts over the next few months to assist a seamless transition.”

During the transition, Liaw, Campbell and Roberts stressed that the objective is to continue to serve students, make progress on the existing strategic initiatives and move the college forward based on the vision, mission and core themes.

“The administrators, staff and faculty at Shoreline are second to none,” Liaw said. “As a board, our goal was to find a leader who can work with our incredible Shoreline community and continue to build this institution to the benefit of our students. While to some a transition can be unsettling, there should be no question about the direction of this college.”

Campbell reiterated that sentiment, saying he will stay focused on immediate tasks and smooth transition.

“I’m proud of the role I’ve been able to play – along with faculty, staff and my fellow administrators – in the success this college has in serving students,” Campbell said. “I will continue to be focused on the significant and important work at hand while also coordinating with the board and incoming president Roberts to assure this transition is as smooth as possible.”

Roberts added that the focused attitude illustrates why she wanted the job in the first place.

“The drive, commitment to students and excellence and sense of community are what drew me to Shoreline,” Roberts said. “I’m looking forward to joining such a dedicated and innovative group. Together, we can continue to grow from the great work that has been done and dive into the work that lay before us with confidence of direction and support.”
Black-box space will help digital media production

While other colleges are closing film and theater programs, Shoreline Community College is expanding its commitment to students, the arts and the community. Later this spring, a new and versatile “black box” media production studio will open for college and community-based projects. The college is combining several under-used areas into a flexible space for video production and live performance. When the studio is completed in June, it will include professional lighting, audio and video equipment, a large green-screen wall and portable risers with seating for about 50 people.

The new studio space also supports the Shoreline Film Office, a collaborative effort of the City of Shoreline’s Office of Economic Development, the college and the Shoreline Community College Foundation.

“Creating this space makes sense for our students,” said Interim President Tony Doupé. “We’re also supporting industry and the economic development plans of our city.”

The mission of the film office is to make Shoreline a recognized hub of the media industry by providing world-class venues and professional education and training. Launched in May, 2013, the film office acts as broker for both college and city services, incentives, venues and production support for local film, gaming, theater and sound professionals.

The Shoreline campus studio, venues and resources are available to media professionals for a nominal charge, especially to those willing to create a laboratory experience for students. To learn more, contact the SFO at (206) 546-5829 or at filmoffice@shorelinewa.gov.

Film students and faculty have hands in 19 films playing at Seattle festivals

Shoreline Community College is well-represented on silver screens across the region at the huge Seattle International Film Festival and the adjacent and quirky Seattle True Independent Film Festival.

“I am extremely pleased to announce that between the two festivals, Shoreline film students, recent alumni and faculty worked on at least 19 movies!” said Kris Boustred, faculty member in Shoreline’s digital filmmaking program. “That’s amazing, and I’m probably missing some!”

The Seattle International Film Festival (SIFF) is the largest and most highly attended festival in the United States and runs May 15-June 8. For this, the festival’s 40th anniversary, organizers have announced screenings of 440 films: 198 features (plus four secret films), 60 documentaries, 14 archival films, and 168 shorts, representing 83 countries. The films include 44 world premieres (20 features, 24 shorts), 30 North American premieres (22 features, eight shorts), and 14 U.S. premieres (eight features and six shorts).

The Seattle True Independent Film Festival (STIFF) began screenings on May 2, serving as a sort of lead-in to SIFF. The festival was founded eight years ago for films that didn’t fit into the programs of mainstream film festivals. The organizing filmmakers are dedicated to independent, underground, experimental and zero-budget films.

Program director and faculty member Tony Doupé said the festivals provide an opportunity for our students to not only see great films, but get their own work the screen and see that their talents and skills are competitive with the best in the world.

“Our faculty members are actively working in the film industry,” Doupé said. “We’re teaching the skills that students will need to get jobs in film and giving them hands-on experience while still in school.”

Shoreline Community College and the City of Shoreline are collaborating on the Shoreline Film Office, an effort to attract more film work to area. “Being able to say to filmmakers that the college and the city are friendly to film is a great step toward bringing projects that benefit our students and the local economy,” Doupé said.

Shoreline is also supporting local filmmakers by sponsoring SIFF’s Northwest Connections program, a collection of films that are rooted in the fertile Pacific Northwest film community.
